A Great Newspaper Comes Up The Avenue of Years

1950 marks the 107th year of The Citizen — 107 years of looking to the home and family for the basic inspiration of its service to the public.

Ottawa people know The Citizen's policies and respect them. Their parents and grandparents knew and respected them. Today, when vital questions demand sane, sound analysis, these policies stand out more prominently than over before.

In its presentation and interpretation of the news, The Citizen caters to no class or group. It publishes the news as it find it, without fear or favor. And it is edited for thorough reading by the family in the home. Thus it finds its way into innermost lives of its readers solving their problems... inspiring their thoughts... voicing their opinions.

So it is that back of the result-producing power of The Citizen there exist character and confidence, the most important appeal that can be made to the purchasing public.

Reader respect and reader confidence are intangible elements, but they represent a driving, pulsing force that vitalizes circulation... brings people into stores... moves merchandise.

This reader respect and reader confidence is The Citizen's greatest asset. It is something no newspaper can buy. It must be earned by performance. But it is an asset that Citizen advertisers share in building sales and prestige in the great Ottawa market.

No advertisers can take more out of a newspaper than the editor puts into it, and few newspapers in Canada can rival the excellence and variety of Citizen features. If you want the business of Citizen families, advertise to them in their newspaper.

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

"Those who have searched for truth know that its aspect often changes and is never certain, and such knowledge teaches tolerance toward the sincere and responsible beliefs of others".

— F. E. Dessauer

There is a sadness in farewell, and I confess that my heart communicates a heaviness to my pen when, as every year I must, I send along a message to the Year Book.

You who are being graduated at the Convocation of the College on May 19th are old friends, as undergraduate time is reckoned. Most of you came first to the College in September 1947, some came earlier, in September 1946, when the College moved for the first time into a building of its own.

All of you have grown up with the College. You have seen its physical accommodations improved, you have had a part (I may now tell you) in selecting the professors and lecturers who have been added to the faculty during your student days. You have shared our days of tumult and of quiet. Your loyalty has been unswerving. You see what is in my mind when I speak of you as old friends?

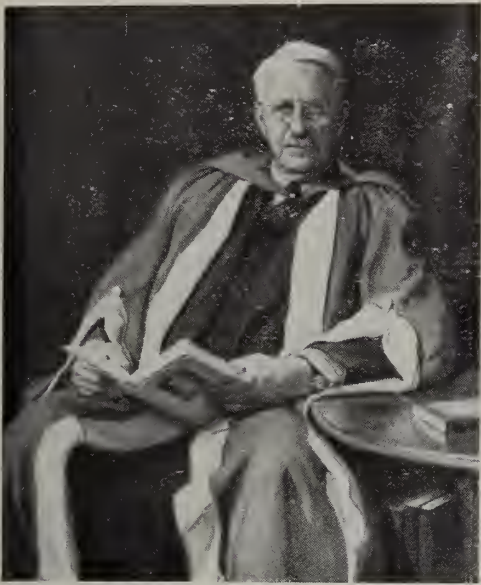

Now you fare forth with your degrees, or your diplomas or your certificates, and with whatever of knowledge, wisdom, method, power, tolerance and humaneness you may have gathered from your teachers and your fellow-students. Our hearts go with you. You bear our hopes. You are "Carleton College in the world of men and affairs". What you do, how you govern your lives, will decide in very large part what Carleton College is to be.

You will not, I hope, forget us. Come back to visit us when you can. Write to us if you cannot visit. Help us, too, when and as you are able to do so. The College has far to go and much to do if it is to become the College of your hopes and ours. We who remain will give of our best. You who ride forth will not neglect, in her days of need, the university mother who in your undergraduate days nursed and nourished you.

Vale!

FOREWARD

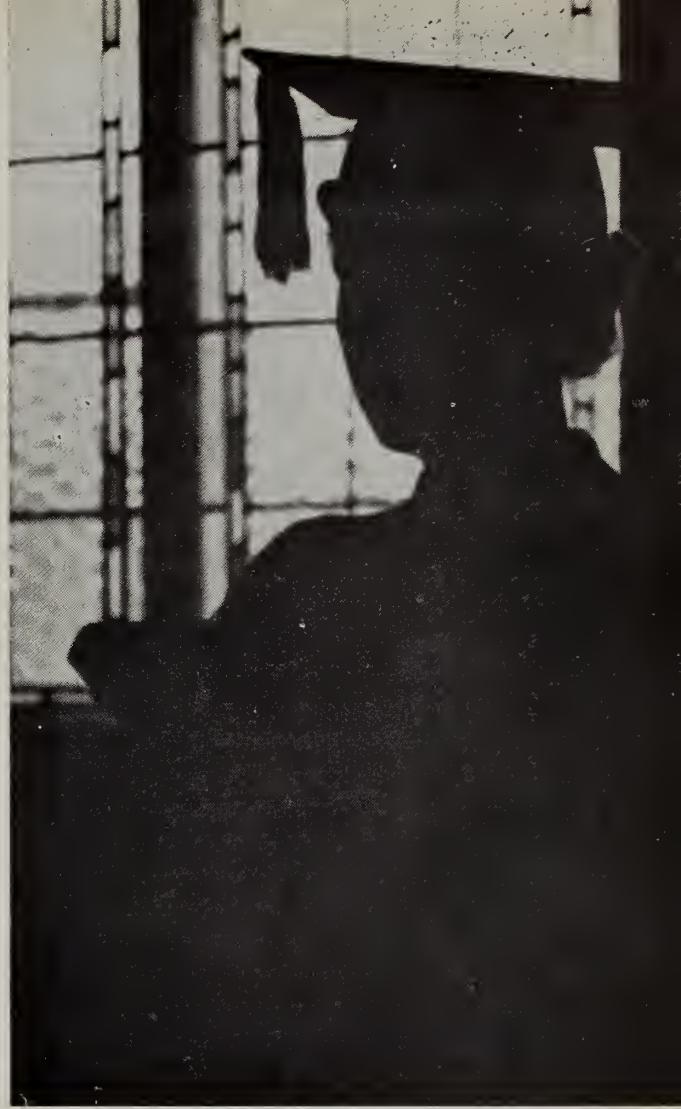

When college educators look back on this post-war period, the feature that will stand out most vividly in their memories, I fancy, will be the generation of war veterans. The first large influx was in 1945-46. Now, in 1950, the tide is at the full, but it begins to recede rapidly; soon it will be entirely a thing of the past. The younger generation, that missed both the menace and the exciting challenge of active service, comes rapidly along to take the places of those who are going. There is wonderful promise among these people of the younger generation, too: but before we greet them, let us recognize the privilege it has been for us, the instructors, to associate with those of the "D.V.A."

These years since the end of hostilities have been crowded, overloaded, exacting years: full of headaches for college administrators, more demanding in many ways than any previous period. Yet everywhere one hears the same testimony: how richly rewarding has been the instruction of the war veteran. How stimulating to find in one's classes men and women who have known the far ends of the earth, faced death and disaster by sea and air and land, men and women who have matured without becoming bitter and cynical, men and women alert to the burning social and political issues of this unparalleled age of history.

The experience for the instructor was at once a challenge and a privilege. I remember how gratified I was to hear of the sweeping plans of the Canadian government to offer to the returning service men and women the facilities of higher education, on terms that would make it possible for scores of thousands to take advantage of them. When I first heard of the D.V.A. program, my interest in it was that of a Canadian citizen only; but by the winter of 1945-46 I was holding 'Round Tables' and other informal sessions in the basement of Knox Church as a lecturer in journalism, with a fine group of D.V.A. students just back from service, and enrolled at Carleton College. Opportunity widened again in the autumn of 1947, when I found myself in charge of a department whose students were largely drawn from the generation of war veterans. I know that I speak for all instructors of Carleton College when I remember with affection and respect the graduating classes of '48 and '49: and those who are portrayed and celebrated in this Year Book. We see them going out to take their place in Canadian life and society; and wish them all, whether war veterans or not, the satisfactions of a rich, varied and challenging life.

LOCKHART Charles H.

"Pop" has odd desire to work . . . most successful looking engineer in second year . . . ex-R.C.A.F. . . Ottawa boy, plans to go to U. of T. for sales engineering

FRANKLIN Lindsay

This guy came straight from the bush into the noise and excitement of the drafting room . . . the shock may have been too much for him . . . we have to wait and see . . . disappeared into Manitoba following exams . . . most engineers take to the bush.

DANN G.

"Danny" hails from LacVert. (wheat-belt) Saskatchewan, and hopes to do exploration work in western oil after graduation . . . president of Engineering Society . . . ex-navy globe-trotter . . . married to terrific cook . . . Has worked in Maritime road surveys.

STINSON William J.

"Bill is a keen chemist and always has a joke... plans to finish chemical engineering course at Queen's after graduation... from the rugged part of Canada... North Bay.

WHEELER Richard J.

Future chemical engineer... one of the top men in the scholastic line-up... but where did you get the handle "Geek"? Hopes to go on to Queen's with the rest of the crew.

CARWARDINE Ronald R.

"Ron" is another ardent skier... Ottawa is his home town... hopes to go into civil engineering after McGill... Belongs to Engineering Society and Ski Club... swims... His swan song... Construction is an ambitious thought, not only an idea" Tote dat chovel, boy!

MAUNDER James F.

Frank is the man who takes science into the woods and for some reason was shot in Labrador last summer... not in a vulnerable spot... suave Ottawa boy is "Moss Back!"

WLODEK Stanley T.

Ex-Polish Ottawa boy... has largest feet in second year engineering... hopes to go to Queen's for Metallurgical Engineering... member of Engineering Society... doesn't seem to think much of scientific outlook.
